Elihu Root

My guess is that you have never heard of Elihu Root. Truth is, neither had I. Yet, Mr. Root had an illustrious career that helped shape the American landscape of the emerging 20th Century. I would have never known the meaningful place this man played in our history had it not been for Mary Gibson who gave me one of Don's old books: The Standard Dictionary of Fact, 1922. Leafing through the book, I stumbled upon this important man. Here is his story:

Born on February 15, 1845, Root lived to be 91 years old, only dying in February 1937. He was the prototype of the 20th Century political 'wise man', adviser to presidents and other persons in high office. He was a leading lawyer and one of his major clients was Andrew Carnegie - Root became chairman of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

He also served under three presidents, Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft and Woodrow Wilson. He was Secretary of State, Senator for New York and also United States Secretary of War. He transformed the US army into an efficient military machine, the equal of any other in the world; he restructured the National Guard and created the Army War College. As Secretary of State, he modernized the consular service and was a foremost forward thinker in Panama (the canal), and in promoting friendly relations with the rest of Latin America, including Puerto Rico. He worked with Japan, Russia, The Philippines, and he was instrumental in sorting out Alaskan border disputes. He has been criticized as being perhaps rather paternalistic in his approach to problems, but the major thrust of all his work was his interest in peace, not war, in organization and structure, not chaos, and, as a convinced democrat, in humanitarian projects, not the maintaining of the establishment. The crowning glory of his life is perhaps the fact that he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1912.

I chose to write about this nearly-forgotten historical man because of his epitaph as a peacemaker. Devoting one's life to the pursuit of bringing people together -- being an instrument of compromise and harmony -- is a noble cause. Jesus taught, "Blessed are the peacemakers for they will be called sons of God" (Matthew 5:9).

Oh, that more people would devote themselves to being peacemakers. Most of all, that more would come to know the Prince of Peace.
