ISSUE NO. 26

Recently I visited the Wonders Of Wildlife National Museum & Aquarium in Springfield, Missouri. It was indeed impressive. Room after room of aquatic life, organized by habitat, left crowds of observers spellbound (including myself!).

Upon entering the building, one comes first to the museum. Most visitors streamed quickly through that and on to the main attraction: the aquarium. I'm glad I didn't. Those moving swiftly through the museum exhibit missed many amazing insights into American History. I would like to highlight one of them: the plight of the Buffalo.

Prior to 1800 there were an estimated 60 million buffalo in the midwestern and western regions of the United States. By 1900 there were 300. Twenty million buffalo were harvested in the 30 years between 1800 and 1830. Tragically, thirty million buffalo were killed between 1840 and 1880. Recovery efforts expanded in the mid 20th Century, and today the buffalo population stands at about 35,000, mostly in reserves and national parks.

AN APPRECIATION AND A RESPONSIBILITY

Buffalo or bison, plains bison or wood bison, whatever word you use refers to this same iconic member of the bovid family. Wood bison males are massive indeed, up to 11'6" from head to rump, weighing up to 2,600 lbs. Not an animal you would like stepping on your foot.... Bison are migratory, searching out the best grasses for food, and will roam about 2 miles a day on average. They live till the age of about 15, but may attain even 25 years in captivity. Perhaps unexpectedly, bison are a considerable danger to humans : on average three times as many visitors to Yellowstone National Park are injured by bison than by bears. They attack if provoked, especially if protecting young, and can reach a charging speed of 40 mph. As well as being the national mammal of the USA, the bison were vital to Native Americans : they live(d) in symbiosis with the animal. It provided clothing and material for their tipis, as well as shields, utensils and weapons.

When considering the buffalo, two things come to mind. First, is an appreciation of the uniqueness of all of God's creation. Old photos of thousands of buffalo standing in the open plains give pause to glorify God for all of his creative handiwork. Second, is a responsibility to protect and care for all of God's creation. This task was given first to Adam in the Garden of Eden. Seeing photos of the massive slaughter of the buffalo makes the observer cringe and reminds him of his responsibility to take better care of God's creation. The heavens declare the glory of God; the skies proclaim the work of his hands. Day after day they pour forth speech; night after night they display knowledge.--Psalm 19:1-2
