Psalm 1

“Blessed is the man who does not walk in the counsel of the wicked or stand in the way of sinners or sit in the seat of mockers” (Psalm 1:1).

Psalm 1 serves as a preface for the rest of The Book of Psalms by introducing a clear theme for its 150-psalm collection: the path of righteousness vs. the path of wickedness. What follows Psalm 1 are sacred songs, prayers, and poetry, contrasting the righteous life with the wicked life – urging God’s people to embrace righteousness, to cast their cares upon God, and to reject wickedness which ultimately leads to destruction. Let’s take a closer look at the opening words of the book.

Walk, Stand, Sit

Psalm 1 presents life as a journey, with walk, stand and sit used to show an ever-growing buy-in to either wickedness or righteousness. What begins as casually walking, becomes committedly sitting. As Christians we are walking towards heaven, walking with Christ and trying to adjust our steps to fit as exactly as possible with those of Jesus. This is radically opposed to those who do not walk with Christ and have been misled by Satan to tread the wider paths that lead to the wide and easy gate (see The Sermon on the Mount, Matthew 7). Those who reject God’s way will prefer to walk with the wicked, listening to their advice and being progressively influenced by their thinking. Next they will begin to linger, standing around chatting and beginning to be drawn into the world of deceit, ease and instant reward. While standing with the wicked, attitudes are changed, values are changed, morality is changed. Finally, and perhaps at least to start with, imperceptibly, these people will take their seats among those forever criticizing, finding fault, poking fun and tearing apart: the seat of scoffers, the place where, with safety in numbers and fellow scoffers at their side, it becomes easy to ridicule what is true, honest, just, pure, lovely, holy and of good report (Philippians 4, Psalm 1:2). It is a picture of increasing involvement and then settled commitment to the ways of Satan. Verse 2 of this psalm provides the contrast and underlines what the people from verse 1 have renounced: the blessed person delights in the law of the Lord, meditating on it day and night. Instead of allowing the counsel of the ungodly to shape his life, he allows God’s teaching to shape his mind and mold his actions.

The deeper question becomes not simply ‘Where do I walk? Where do I stand? Where do I sit?’, but ‘Whose wisdom do I allow to form me and direct my life?’

Our choice is made. May God help us to show others the way.
