BISTRO

Consider this: You are traveling down the highway, you are hungry, and you see a sign on the side of a building that says “Bistro”. Would you stop? If you did, would you know what you would find inside?

A Bistro (or “Bistrot”) is a typical Parisian eating place, uniting the following elements: simple, often home-made cuisine; good quality food at a cheap price; simple wooden tables and chairs. Bistros were originally associated with the board part of a cheap room-and-board and thus were attached to lodging houses. Owners of these establishments realized they could make more money if they also opened them up to people who weren’t staying overnight.

Folk etymology has it that the French word derives from the Russian “bistro”, meaning “quickly”. Russian troops quartered in Paris after the Napoleonic wars did not have much time to eat, so they told the waiter, “BISTRO BISTRO”, or “Bring my food quickly!”.

In times gone by, mealtimes were less rushed. They usually contained several “courses”, and participants were allowed long periods of time to eat, talk and relax (especially on a summer’s Sunday after morning church). The hurried, frenzied style of “fast food”, “bistro = quickly quickly”, eating is a modern phenomenon that says eating is like refueling a car and needs to be done as quickly as possible (preferably handed through a car window at a drive-thru and consumed on the go).

As life speeds up, I wonder if we lose sight of the simple pleasures of a meal together, a slow walk in the park or relaxing with a good book. As life speeds up, I wonder, do the most important things get neglected in favor of the most urgent things?

Our fast-paced lives may cause us to miss something in our children’s lives. Our fast-paced lives may keep us from noticing that person who needs a kind “hello” and a friendly gesture. Our fast-paced lives may make us miss that opportunity to share the gospel with a neighbor. Our “bistro, bistro” lives may keep us very busy with many things that mean very little.

“But seek first his kingdom and his righteousness, and all these things will be given to you as well. Therefore do not worry about tomorrow, for tomorrow will worry about itself.” (Matthew 6:33-34).
