Genealogy (Matthew 1, Luke 3)

The Genealogy of Jesus as given in Matthew and Luke is something that many Bible readers rush through in order to get to "the good stuff". To discount the genealogy is shortsighted because, by doing so, many important and interesting facts are missed.

The genealogy displays the grace of God

In the genealogy of Jesus, we find many notable people: David, Solomon, the good kings of Judah, Zerubbabel and others. Upon deeper inspection, we find a few unexpected, perhaps even shocking people: the Gentiles Rahab (the Canaanite) and Ruth (the Moabitess). That these two are a part of the history of Jesus highlights the nature of God's abundant grace (his love, interest and concern) extended to all, even Gentiles.

The genealogy reveals Jesus' age at the beginning of his ministry.

Luke 3:23 tells us that Jesus was 30 years old when he began his earthly ministry. Until then, Jesus had lived an obscure and simple life as the son of a carpenter in the village of Nazareth. There are good reasons that Jesus began his ministry at age thirty. Thirty is the age at which Levites could begin temple service, and King David appointed them from that age onwards. Joseph entered Pharaoh's service at age 30, David became king at 30 and Ezekiel began to prophesy at the same age. Thirty is still young, but old enough to have acquired wisdom and experience...and it is not too old. The Jews of Jesus' era would have accepted a Rabbi, although a young one, at age thirty.

The genealogy ties Jesus to Abraham, David, and Adam.

Hidden in the genealogical lists of both Matthew and Luke, there are important nuggets of information. Matthew, who was writing to a mainly Jewish audience, is at pains to underline that Jesus is the Jewish Messiah, heir to Abraham and to David. His genealogy is 3 sets of 14 generations each, presenting Jesus as the climax to Jewish history, the one who brings reconciliation after exile - but, of course, not only the Jews' historic exile, but the exile of every person, every race that is without Christ. In Jewish tradition, genealogies were essential in establishing tribal rights, to land and to inheritance, and, in Jesus' case, in establishing his claims to be the Messiah: any reader is free to check out the truth of Jesus' lineage for himself.

Interestingly, Matthew, through the examples of Gentile women (Tamar, Ruth, Rahab) and of Bathsheba, endeavors to prepare the overwhelmingly Jewish patriarchal mind for new ideas. Luke, on the other hand, writing principally for a Gentile audience, establishes Christ as the son of Adam, the son of God: this is the Messiah for the whole world, not just for Jews, even if, at the outset, Jews were in "pole position". Luke, by tracing Jesus back to Adam, sets Jesus up as the son of God who will succeed, where Adam failed.

Seeing the pattern behind the names is a true eye opener, and I pray we may all be blessed in seeing it. ~Stephen

Faith of a Mustard Seed Matthew 13:31-32

In the parable of the mustard seed, Jesus says that the kingdom of heaven is like a mustard seed - it spreads throughout the land. Then, it grows into something big and beautiful. That one little seed made a home for many. Just one person can make a difference in God's kingdom. We should spread the word of God. Just have FAITH! ♥
