CORBAN

The Pharisees and teachers of the law went out of their way to criticize Jesus and his disciples. We often find them surrounding Jesus’ followers asking entrapping questions and accusing them of violating the “traditions of the elders”. On one such occasion, Jesus quoted from Isaiah, “These people honor me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me. They worship me in vain; their teachings are but rules taught by men” (Mark 7:6-7). Jesus then exposed a religious loophole that the Pharisees employed to “set aside the commands of God in order to observe their own traditions” (Mark 7:9). The loophole was called Corban.

Corban is a Hebrew word which originally meant ‘draw near’. Like the tithes, the corban was a way for observant Jews to give gifts to God. However, like so much else that originates with men and starts off well-intentioned, whenever such a thing becomes entrenched in tradition, people may, and often do, start to forget its origins and appropriate it to their own advantage. Giving a gift to God, drawing near to God, was, of course, in its own terms, a good and honorable thing to do. In this discussion about parents in Mark 7, it is clear that Jesus is criticizing people’s tendencies to stop honoring their elderly and perhaps needful parents and instead speak the word ‘corban’ over the property or animal - thus removing it from ordinary life and making it over to God. Jesus could not for one moment have wanted parents to be abandoned and reduced to poverty by a wilful child saying ‘corban’ over something that might have helped his parents in their old age. It is a clear case of selfish behavior masquerading as honoring God that was typical of the way many scribes and Pharisees behaved.

By shedding light on the religious loophole of Corban, Jesus exposed the lengths to which people go to excuse themselves from obeying God. Sometimes we may find ourselves loaded with a list of rationalizations ready to excuse our obedience to God’s commands. We defer to our own traditions rather than submitting in obedience to what Jesus actually teaches. May it be said of us that our traditions aid us in obeying the commands of God rather than nullifying them.
