In the night, at the well, by the pool

The opening chapters of the gospel of John show Jesus as the Savior of all. John invites us into Jesus' private moments with Nicodemus (a learned Jewish leader), The Samaritan Woman (a racial outcast) and The Invalid (a helpless sick man). In each of these interactions, Jesus meets them where they are and brings them closer. Let's take a look.

Nicodemus – perhaps the most surprising of the three we are considering today. As a member of the Sanhedrin and a Pharisee, he was extremely well-versed in Jewish doctrine and as a member of the supreme council, involved with politics also, Yet there was in his personality a sense of healthy questing for the truth which allowed him to see Jesus differently from his peers. In the deadly cat and mouse pursuit the Sanhedrin was engaged in, Nicodemus had to be risky: he came to Jesus by night, a sign of his needing to be stealthy in his search for information. But before Nicodemus can ask his first question, Jesus short-circuits him and speaks of re-birth (cleansing by water in baptism, cleansing by fire through the spirit). Jesus meets him where he is and sees into Nicodemus's heart, giving him hope. Nicodemus is presented with new possibilities through Jesus' love. Jesus met Nicodemus in the night.

The Samaritan Woman – The woman's wrecked life is no secret to Jesus, and he meets her where she needs to be, at the well. Having revealed her past life to her, gaining her trust, He gives her the promise of rebirth she so desperately needs. Through the symbolism of the water she left behind in her forgotten bucket, the old life she deliberately spilt out when she ran to tell the town of the arrival of the Messiah, she receives the promise of life-giving water in her rebirth into a follower of Christ. She will never again thirst, for Christ has quenched the thirst of her soul. Jesus met the woman at the well.

The Invalid –John 5 tells of an invalid beside the Pool of Bethesda. Around this pool were a desperate lot of people, miserable, sick and hoping for healing. As the years passed by, these miserable souls certainly plunged deeper and deeper into despair. No relief came from the bubbling waters that promised hope. Then came Jesus. He meets this fragile soul where he is (midst misery) and gives him hope. More than hope: healing. He walked away, mat in hand. Jesus met the invalid at the pool. In the midst of these three we may very likely find ourselves. Rest assured, Jesus seeks to meet us where we are and bring us closer to himself. How blessed we are to have a Savior who seeks us out and gives hope and rebirth. Jesus meets us where we are.

After God's Own Heart by Addison Middleton
excerpt:

"Looked over by many,
Low in status,
A man after God's own heart.
...
A man after God's own heart.
Not because of mistakes,
But because of repentance,
Humility in the face of pride."
