The Goal

"... for you are receiving the goal of your faith, the salvation of your souls" (1 Peter 1:9).

The Front of My Bible

I inherited my mom's pocket NIV New Testament. The pages are worn with writing both on the inside covers and on most every page. She considered her Bible: a workbook; a manual for life; words to be understood, consumed and obeyed. Inside the front cover of mom's Bible is written "The goal of your faith: salvation (1 Peter 1:8-9)." When I read it, I was intrigued. I turned and read the First Peter context. It made me think about goals.

Goals

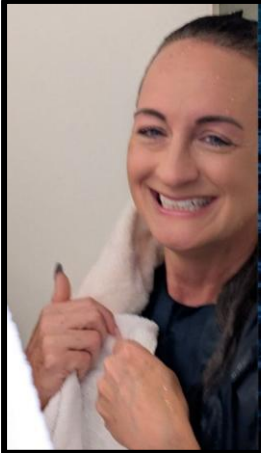

There is a lot of empirical evidence from research over the past 40 years that having clear goals helps the average person towards increased productivity. This happens because focus is often improved (people learn to prioritize, leaving aside less important aims) and procrastination is shelved: people are more inclined to put things off to another day if they are not 100% involved in the project concerned; additionally, the sense of achievement one feels when a goal is reached is majorly rewarding. There are, of course, provisos: goals must be realistic (setting the bar too high leads to discouragement) and the challenge works best when self-chosen (imposed goals run the risk of being too demanding and may not be tailor-made to suit a given personality). So, what are the 'best' goals? Here is a suggestion: relevant, specific, challenging (but doable) goals work best for most people; and people generally react best if they are positively encouraged by family and friends.

THE Goal

There is no greater goal than THE goal of salvation. Paul speaks of the inexpressible joy associated with THIS goal. Translators have described it as "the end of your faith (KJV)", "the outcome of your faith (NASB)", "the reward for trusting him (NLT)." Whatever the term selected, the goal of salvation is a paramount pursuit of every Christian. It is our goal, our pursued outcome, our desired reward. May this always be my ultimate goal, my ultimate striving: a relevant, specific and challenging goal. A goal I continually set my eyes upon. Unlike human goals that lean upon my own skills, THIS goal relies upon Christ. My goal is to please HIM (2 Corinthians 5:9).

Thanks, mom, for the reminder. ~ Stephen
